Description: As part of a collaborative venture between Chandidas Mahavidyalaya and Hiralal Bhakat College, the session was graced by the presence of our honorable guest Dr. Suddhasattwa Banerjee who imparted sound knowledge to the students of the English department on the given area. Our students were enriched by his versatility and his way of presenting the content in a simple way. His talk was full of inspirational value and bears the answer to our students' questions in every possible way. It also helped add a distinctive perspective to the way in which tragedy as a literary genre may be perceived with a special emphasis on the transformation of tragic drama through the centuries in western literature.

Thrust Area

- Dr. Banerjee laid special emphasis in his lecture on the scope for research related to the given topic.
- Helping students understand the nature of research work, the resource person attempted to point out to them the various areas where there was scope for further research and tried to motivate them to think independently and outside of the demands of classroom and examinations to enable them to better appreciate not only the topic of the discussion but the discipline as a whole.
- He pointed out the major areas where research work has already been undertaken, especially in the context of Western classical tragedy with an emphasis on the major dramatists who have shaped the trajectory of western drama.
- He drew references from a range of different writers and pointed out not only their contribution to world literature but also how their works have shaped and inspired later dramatists and writers through the centuries across time, space and language.
